PART V.

SUPPLEMENT TO THE SECOND VOLUME.

V.—TWO PALLAVA COPPER-PLATE GRANTS.

No. 98.—VELURPALAIYAM PLATES OF VIJAYA-NANDIVARMAN (III).

These plates were discovered in 1911 by the late Rai Bahadur V. Venkayya, M.A., in the village Vêlûrpâḷaiyam, about 7 miles north-west of Arkonam in the North Arcot district. They have since been purchased by the Government for deposit in the Madras Museum. A detailed description of the plates and their contents has appeared in the Epigraphical Report for 1911, Part II, paragraphs 5 to 12. Mr. Venkayya also, has published a valuable note on them in the Journal of the Royal Asiatic Society for 1911, pp. 521 ff.

The plates are five in number and consist of eight written sides, the outer faces of the first and last being completely blank. They vary in length from $9\frac{5}{8}''$ to $9\frac{3}{4}''$, and are slightly convex on their right and left sides. The breadth of each plate is about $3\frac{1}{2}''$. The ring which holds the plates together is oval-shaped, and measures $7'' \times 6\frac{1}{4}''$, while the circular seal in whose massive bottom the edges of the ring are firmly fixed, is $3\frac{1}{4}''$ in diameter. The seal bears on a depressed surface an elongated figure of a Pallava bull in a recumbent posture facing the proper right with an ornamental lamp-stand on either side of it. The bull and the lamp-stands are placed on a straight line which is perhaps to be taken for the surface of a pedestal. Below this latter, there appear the faint traces of an expanded lotus flower. Above the bull are engraved in one row, eight symbols of which a goddess (perhaps Lakshmî), flanked by two lamp-stands occupies the centre. Another symbol which is recognisable is the svastika. The remaining four are indistinct. Above these again are the insignia of royalty, viz., two chauris mounted on handles and a parasol between them. Right round the margin of the seal is a defaced legend in Pallava-Grantha characters of which the syllables . . . . va-nâthasya Nan[tipa]ṉmas[ya] bhû[pa]têḥ* [|*] viśva-[vi]śva[ṁ]bharâ-pâla śrîḥ, are visible. The plates including ring and seal weigh 394 tolas.

The inscription on the plates is engraved partly in Grantha and partly in Tamil characters. The writing discloses two different scripts, the first of which (ll. 1 to 28) is somewhat less deeply cut and slanting. The virâma or the puḷḷi in the Tamil portion of the inscription is marked almost regularly throughout, by a zigzag line resembling the final m of Grantha or by the usual dot. The grant consists of 31 Sanskṛit verses intercepted in the middle by a prose passage in Tamil from lines 47 to 63, and including at the end a short Tamil sentence in lines 68 and 69. Verses 1 and 2 are invocations addressed to the Supreme Being and to Śrîkaṇṭha (Śiva). The two next supply the legendary origin of the Pallavas from Vishṇu, down to the eponymous king Pallava, through Brahmâ, Aṅgiras, Bṛihaspati, Śaṁyu, Bharadvâja, Drôṇa, and Aśvatthâman, and eulogise the family as being very powerful. From verses 5 to 8, we learn the names of some probably historical kings. One of them was Aśôkavarman in whose family was born Kâḷabhartṛi. His son was Chûtapallava; his son, Vîrakûrcha; from him came Skandaśishya; from him, Kumâravishṇu and after him, Buddhavarman. It is evident, as Professor Hultzsch has remarked, (above, p. 342), that Aśôkavarman "can scarcely be considered a historical person, but appears to be a modification of the ancient Maurya king Aśôka." Kâḷabhartṛi is a possible synonym of Kâṇagôpa, who is mentioned in the Kâśâkuḍi plates, in the group of kings that ruled after Aśôkavarman. Vîrakûrcha, the grandson of Kâḷabhartṛi (Kâṇagôpa), must be the Vîrakôrchavarman whose name occurs as that of the great grandfather (of the donor) in an odd Pallava plate published by Professor Hultzsch in the Epigraphia Indica (Vol. I, p. 397 f.) and the same as Vîravarman of the Pîkira, Mâṅgaḷûr, Uruvupalli and the Chendalûr grants, all of which belong practically to the same period. Vîrakûrcha is stated to have married the daughter of a Nâga chief [1] and through her, to have acquired the insignia of royalty. Their son Skandaśishya seized from king Satyasêna the ghaṭikâ of the Brâhmaṇas. The reference to a ghaṭikâ at this early period is very interesting. It occurs also in the Tâlagunda inscription of Kakusthavarman which is ascribed by Professor Kielhorn to about the first half of the 6th century A.D.[2] Skandaśishya is perhaps identical with the Pallava king of the same name, who is referred to in one of the Tirukkaṛukkuṉṟam inscriptions[3], as having made a gift to the holy temple of Mûlasthâna at that village. If Skandaśishya is synonymous with Skandavarman as suggested by Mr. Venkayya in his article on the Tirukkaṛukkuṉṟam inscription, we shall have to identify him with Skandavarman II, particularly because the two generations after him supplied by the Vêlûrpâḷaiyam plates would, in this case, be the same as those found in the Chendalûr plates of Kumâravishṇu II.[4] Satyasêna, the king from whom Skandaśishya seized the ghaṭikâ, remains unidentified. Kumâravishṇu, the son of Skandaśishya, is next stated to have captured Kâñchî, and his son Buddhavarman to have been the conqueror of the Chôḷas.

Mr. Venkayya mentions two distinct periods in early Pallava history, viz. (1) the period in which their grants are recorded in the Prâkṛit language and (2) that in which the grants are in Sanskṛit.[5] The first has been tentatively assigned to the beginning of the 4th century A.D. Evidently, the break suggested at the beginning of verse 5 in the Vêlûrpâḷaiyam plates with the words "Aśôkavarman and others," included this earlier period of the Prâkṛit charters, and counted within it such names as Śivaskandavarman, Vijayaskandavarman, Vijayabuddhavarman, Buddhyaṅkura and Vishṇugôpa. The Sanskṛit charters, which are to be referred probably to the 5th and the 6th centuries of the Christian era, supply the names of a number of Pallava kings who may now be arranged in order of

[1] The account of the Pallava connection with a Nâga princess, here attributed to Vîrakûrcha, is already mentioned of the progenitor Aśvatthâman himself, in the Râyakôṭa plates of Skandaśishya-Vikramavarman (Ep. Ind., Vol. V, p. 52). A similar story of the early Chôḷa king Kiḷḷi having taken to wife a Nâga princess, is related in the Perumbâṇâṟṟuppaḍai. The mythical account given in the Mahâbhârata, of the epic hero Arjuna marrying a Nâga queen, combined with what is stated of the Nâga connections in inscriptions and literature, confirms the accepted belief, that the Nâgas were the original indigenous rulers of Southern India and that they were subdued in course of time by foreign invaders from the North, eventually losing their individuality by intermarriages with them.

[2] Ep. Ind., Vol. VIII, p. 26. According to the Kâñchî inscription of Vikramâditya II, Conjeeveram continued to be the seat of a ghaṭikâ in the beginning of the 8th century A.D. (ibid., Vol. III, p. 360, note 4). The hill at Sholinghur in the North Arcot district is known as Ghaṭikâchala, perhaps on account of its having also been the seat of a ghaṭikâ.

succession, with the help of the information given in the Vêlûrpâḷaiyam plates. The capture, or rather the re-capture of Kâñchî attributed to Kumâravishṇu in these plates confirms Mr. Venkayya's suggestion that that town was not the Pallava capital for some time during the interval between the Prâkṛit period and the later Sanskṛit period. Kâḷabhartṛi (Kâṇagôpa) may have been the first of the kings of the second period which lasted down to Buddhavarman according to our plates, or down to his son Kumâravishṇu II according to the Chendalûr plates. The question however arises whether Kumâravishṇu (I) of the Chendalûr and the Vêlûrpâḷaiyam plates has to be identified with Yuvamahârâja Vishṇugôpavarman or to be treated as still another son of Skandaśishya (Skandavarman II). The former alternative was suggested by Mr. Venkayya together with the further supposition that Buddhavarman and Siṁhavarman II may have been brothers.[1] But as the names Vishṇugôpa and Kumâravishṇu are mentioned simultaneously together among Pallava ancestors, as for instance, in the Vâyalûr pillar inscription of the time of Râjasiṁha,[2] we may presume, perhaps tentatively, Kumâravishṇu I to be a third son of Skandavarman II. The following revised pedigree of the Pallava kings based on the Vêlûrpâḷaiyam plates and the Sanskṛit charters of Pîkira, Mâṅgaḷûr, Uruvupalli and Chendalûr, is given provisionally, subject to the identifications and suggestions made above :—

Kâḷabhartṛi (Kâṇagôpa)
Chûtapallava
(perhaps, a surname of Skandavarman I mentioned in the Uruvupalli grant)
Vîrakûrcha (Vîrakôrchavarman or Vîravarman)
Skandaśishya (Skandavarman II)

Siṁhavarman I	Yuvamahârâja-Vishṇugôpa or Vishṇugôpavarman	Kumâravishṇu I
Skandavarman III	Siṁhavarman II	Buddhavarman
Nandivarman[3]		Kumâravishṇu II

After v. 8 we are again introduced to another gap in the succession in which were included a host of kings such as Vishṇugôpa[4] and others. Then appeared a king named Nandivarman I who brought under his control a powerful snake apparently called Dṛishṭivisha.[5] In verse 10, Siṁhavarman, the father of Siṁhavishṇu, is introduced,—no connection being specified between himself and the Nandivarman just mentioned. Siṁhavishṇu was the conqueror of the Chôḷa country which was fertilized by the river Cauvery.

[2] Madras Epigraphical Report for 1909, Part II, paragraph 17.

[3] The names Nandivarman, Skandavarman III, and Siṁhavarman I are taken from a grant published by Professor Kielhorn (Ep. Ind., Vol. III, pp. 142 ff.) and suspected by him to be a spurious document.

[4] A Pallava copper-plate grant from the Guntur district recently examined, belongs to the time of a certain Vishṇugôpavarman II whose father was Siṁhavarman, a son of Vishṇugôpavarman I and grandson of Kandavarman. I have assigned this to the period subsequent to Kumâravishṇu II of the Chendalûr plates (Madras Epigraphical Report for 1914, p. 82).

[5] The influence of the Nâgas who, as already suggested, must have been the original rulers of Southern India apparently continued down to the time of Nandivarman of about the 6th century A.D. In later times the Sindas of Yelburga (Dr. Fleet's Dynasties of the Kanarese districts, p. 572) and the Chhindas of Bastar traced their origin to the serpents (nâga).

What follows of the Pallava genealogy is not new. It is a repetition of the account already supplied by the Kâśâkuḍi, Kûram and the Udayêndiram plates. Stone inscriptions written in the Pallava-Grantha characters commence from this period,—a fact which suggests that, with the conquest of Siṁhavishṇu, the Pallavas must have extended their dominion further south of Kâñchî into the Chôḷa country and adopted the Dravidian language generally found mixed up with Sanskrit in the later stone inscriptions. From Siṁhavishṇu's son Mahêndravarman I was born Narasiṁhavarman I. This King whose conquest of Vâtâpi (Bâdâmi) and the Western Chalukya Pulakêśin II has frequently been described, is stated in verse 11 to have defeated his enemies and to have taken from them the pillar of victory standing at Vâtâpi.[1] Then came Paramêśvaravarman I, an enemy of the Western Chalukya king Vikramâditya I, whom, according to the Kûram and the Udayêndiram plates, he defeated at Peruvaḷanallûr. Paramêśvara's "son's son" was Narasiṁhavarman II, who re-organised the ghaṭikâ of the Brâhmaṇas, and built a temple for Śiva "comparable with the mountain Kailâsa". This is a clear reference to the building of the Kailâsanâtha temple at Conjeeveram by Narasiṁhavarman II.[2] The latter's son was Paramêśvara II. The usurpation of the Pallava throne by Nandivarman II, subsequent to the death of Paramêśvara II, is clearly stated in verse 15. The distant relation that existed between the usurper Nandivarman II and Paramêśvara II is described in the Kâśâkuḍi plates.

Two points in the account given above are worthy of note: (1) the omission of the name Mahêndravarman II after Narasiṁhavarman I and (2) the statement that Narasiṁhavarman II was the "son's son"[3] of Paramêśvara I. The latter is probably an error, since all the three published Pallava accounts agree in saying that Narasiṁhavarman II was the son, not the grandson, of Paramêśvara I. The former, however, may be different. For although the Kûram plates call Paramêśvaravarman I, the grandson of Narasiṁhavarman I, still the doubtful way in which this relationship is expressed in the Kâśâkuḍi and the Udayêndiram plates, taken together with the statement of the Vêlûrpâḷaiyam plates, makes it appear as if Mahêndravarman II and Paramêśvaravarman I were both sons of Narasiṁhavarman I, thus reducing the seven generations between Siṁhavishṇu and Paramêśvaravarman II, to six. The usurper Nandivarman II who, according to the Kâśâkuḍi plates, was sixth in descent from a brother of Siṁhavishṇu could not at the time of his usurpation be a generation older than Paramêśvaravarman II whose kingdom he usurped. Indeed, as hinted in the Udayêndiram plates, he must have been much younger to justify his being called there the son of Paramêśvaravarman. Consequently it appears probable that Mahêndravarman II and Paramêśvaravarman I were actually brothers and that the succession after Narasiṁhavarman I passed

[1] It is not unlikely that this pillar of victory had been set up there by one of the ancestors of Narasiṁhavarman himself. The fragmentary rock inscription at Bâdâmi published by Dr. Fleet (Ind. Ant., Vol. IX, p. 99f.) refers to Vâtâpi, [Narasiṁ]havishṇu and to a pillar of victory (jayastambha). Dr. Fleet is of opinion that Bâdâmi (Vâtâpi) "was originally the Western India stronghold of the Pallavas and that it was from them that the Chalukyas wrested it. It is probable that Vâtâpi was temporarily recovered by the Pallavas from the Western Chalukyas after the reign of Pulakêśin II".

[2] Recorded in an inscription round the central shrine of the temple; above, Vol. I, No. 24.

[3] The actual word putra-sûnu though used, very peculiarly, in place of the more common pautra, leaves no doubt that the composer could not have intended any other term of relationship.

on directly to the latter, the former having, perhaps, died before him. Two successions after the usurper Nandivarman (Pallavamalla) are further supplied for the first time by the Vêlûrpâḷaiyam plates. Nandivarman II's son by Rêvâ was the Pallava-Mahârâja Dantivarman (verse 18). His queen was the Kadamba princess Aggaḷanimmaṭî; from these, was born king Nandivarman III, or according to the Tamil portion of the inscription, Vijaya-Nandivarman, in the sixth year of whose reign the subjoined grant was made. No specific historical facts are mentioned in connection with these kings. Nandivarman III is stated to have "acquired the prosperity of the Pallava kingdom by the prowess of his (own) arms" (verse 20). From this we may infer that the sovereignty over the Pallava kingdom had now been keenly contested either by outsiders or by some direct descendents of the Siṁhavishṇu line.

In the Chingleput, North Arcot, South Arcot and Trichinopoly districts, there have been discovered a number of stone records (more or less of the same age as the Vêlûrpâḷaiyam plates) which refer themselves to the reigns of Dantivarman, Dantivarma-Mahârâja, Dantippôttaraśar or Vijaya-Dantivikramavarman, and also of Nandivarman with similar variations in the name. Again, the Bâhûr plates[1] supply the names Dantivarman, (his son) Nandivarman and (his son) Nṛipatuṅgadêva or Vijaya-Nṛipatuṅgavarman, as members of the Pallava family, among whose ancestors were Vimala, Koṅkaṇika and others. From this latter statement Professor Hultzsch concluded that the kings mentioned in the Bâhûr plates were different from the Pallavas of Kâñchî and were only "Pallava by name but Western Gaṅga by descent." It is now, therefore, difficult to say if the Dantivarmans and the Nandivarmans of the stone records mentioned above, are to be identified with those mentioned in the Bâhûr plates, or with those of the Vêlûrpâḷaiyam plates or with both. Mr. Venkayya is inclined to connect the names in the Bâhûr plates with those of the Vêlûrpaḷaiyam plates, and suggests that Vijaya-Nṛipatuṅgavarman of the former was apparently the son of Nandivarman III of the latter. Against this the only objection is the ancestry which, in the one case includes the clear Western Gaṅga name (or surname) Koṅkaṇika, while in the other it does not. If, however, Mr. Venkayya's suggestion is accepted, we must presume two facts to arrive at a concurrent genealogy, and to connect the kings of stone records with those mentioned in the Vêlûrpâḷaiyam and the Bâhûr plates. The prefix kô-vijaya and the suffix vikramavarman which are invariably found appended to the names of the kings in this series must have been introduced for the first time by the usurper Nandivarman Pallavamalla, who, we know, literally won the kingdom by victory (vijaya) and by prowess (vikrama)[2], and that Nṛipatuṅgavarman who was decidedly the most powerful[3] of this last branch of the Pallavas, and a son of the Râshṭrakûṭa princess Śaṅkhâ, must have contracted new relations with the Western Gaṅgas to justify the insertion of one or more of the names of that dynasty among his Pallava ancestors. Even with these suppositions granted, the identification of kings mentioned in stone records with the Nandivarmans and Dantivarmans of the copper-plate grants presents peculiar difficulties. The script of 1 See Postscript.

2 Vijaya and vikrama as prefixes and suffixes of Pallava names occur in much earlier records e.g. in names like Vijaya-Buddhavarman, Vijaya-Îśvaravarman and Mahêndravikramavarman; but here they do not signify any distinct branch of kings.

3 Ep. Ind., Vol. VIII, p. 293 and foot-note 3.

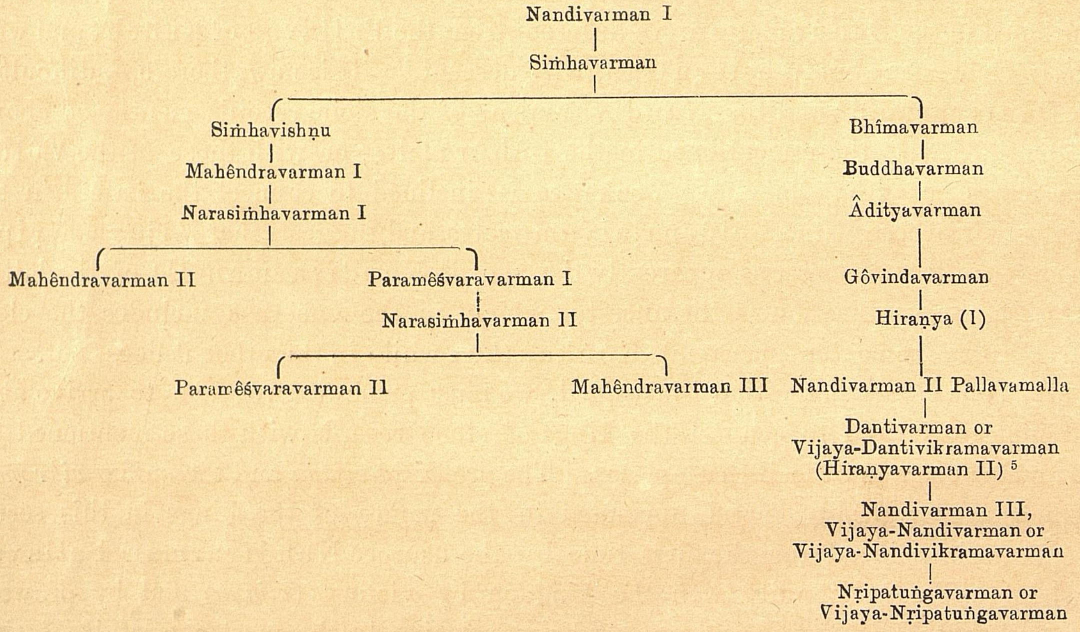
the copper-plates, though of the same age with that of the stone inscriptions often differs from it,[1] and the information supplied by the latter is so meagre that hardly any points of contemporaneous nature that could help us in such identification, are forthcoming. In the present state of our knowledge therefore, it may be hypothetically presumed that kings of names Nandivarman and Dantivarman with or without the prefix kô-vijaya and the suffix vikramavarman, may be taken to be one or the other of the immediate ancestors of Nṛipatuṅga-Vikramavarman; while kings described as Dantivarma-Mahârâja of the Bhâradvâja-gôtra,[2] Dantivarman and Nandivarman of the Pallava-tilaka-kula,[3] and Nandivarman "who conquered [his enemies] at Teḷḷâṟu,"[4] have to be kept distinct.

In conclusion it may be stated, by way of a resumé, that the Pallava history covers four separate periods extending from about the 4th to the 9th century A.D. with three gaps which remain yet to be filled up satisfactorily by later researches. These are (1) the period of the Prâkṛit charters; (2) after a gap of a little more than a century, the period of the Sanskṛit charters; (3) after another gap (or rather two gaps) of about the same length the period of stone inscriptions when, the Siṁhavishṇu line was predominant; and (4) the last period when the Nandivarman line (developing later, into what has been called the Gaṅga-Pallava line) was powerful until it was completely crushed by the Chôḷas. A table of the kings of the Siṁhavishṇu line and of the collateral branch of Nandivarman Pallavamalla down to Nṛipatuṅgavarman of the Bâhûr plates is appended below :—



The object of the Vêlûrpâḷaiyam grant was the gift of the village Śrîkaṭṭuppaḷḷi or Tirukkâṭṭuppaḷḷi to a temple of Śiva built at that village by a certain Yajñabhaṭṭa or Śaṇṇakkuṟi Yajñabhaṭṭa, surnamed Bappa-Bhaṭṭâraka,[6] in the sixth year of the reign of king Nandivarman III. The request (vijñapti) was made by the Chôḷa-Mahârâja[1] Kumârâṅkuśa, while the executor (âjñapti or âṇatti) was the minister Namba (in Tamil, Iraiyûr-uḍaiyâṉ-Nambaṉ) of the Agradatta family. The donee was the Mahâdêva (Śiva) temple of Yajñêśvara at Tirukkâṭṭuppaḷḷi. Verse 28 informs us that the composer of the praśasti[2] was the Mâhêśvara Manôdhîra. Verse 31 and the Tamil sentence following it, supply the name of Pêraya, a clever carpenter of Maṉaichchêri in Kachchippêḍu (Conjeeveram), who engraved the writing on these plates.

[6] This surname occurs in early Sanskrit charters of the Pallavas and has been translated "lord-father". Perhaps the term was one of high respect applied to spiritual preceptors, and it is not unlikely that Yajñabhaṭṭa stood in this relation to king Nandivarman III. The spiritual preceptor of Nandivarman Pallavamalla is also called Bappa-Bhaṭṭâraka in the Kâśâkuḍi plates (text, l. 78).

One point of great interest in the Tamil portion of the grant is the long list of exemptions (parihâra) and the written declaration (vyavasthâ) with which Tirukkâṭṭuppaḷḷi was made over to the temple assembly (paraḍai, Skt. parishad). The former included items of collection whose significance is not quite clear, but which, as the inscription says, the king "could receive and enjoy." It appears as though most of the items here mentioned were not necessarily sources of revenue to the State, as now understood, but only obligatory services which the king could enforce on the people for the benefit of the community. By the written declaration the donee was permitted to build (without any special license) mansions of burnt brick; to grow Artimissia, Andropogan Muricatum, red lilies and uḷḷi in gardens; to plant cocoanut trees in groves; to sink reservoirs and wells; to use large oil-presses; and to prohibit toddy-drawers from tapping for toddy, the cocoanut and the palmyra trees planted within the four boundaries of the village.

The village Tirukkâṭṭuppaḷḷi is identical with Kâṭṭuppaḷḷi in the Poṉṉêri tâluk of the Chingleput district; Nâyaṟu-nâḍu of Puṟaṟ-kôṭṭam, in which the village is stated to have been situated, takes its name from the village Nâyar of the same tâluk, about 8½ miles south-west of Kâṭṭuppaḷḷi. In the British Museum plates of the Vijayanagara king Sadâśivarâya of the 16th century A. D., Nâyattu-nâḍu (i.e., Nâyaṟu-nâḍu) is described as being a sub-division of Puḷali-kôṭaka (i.e., Puṟaṟ-kôṭṭam).[3]

[1] The Chôḷas at this period must have been occupying a subordinate position. Neither literature nor inscriptions afford any clue to the identification of this Chôḷa-Mahârâja Kumârâṅkuśa, who was evidently a feudatory of king Nandivarman III. The name Kumârâṅkuśa-Gâvuṇḍa occurs among the signatories in a record of Parântaka I (No. 457 of the Madras Epigraphical collection for 1911).

TRANSLATION.

Hail! Prosperty! Adoration to Śiva!

(Verse 1.) May that effulgence which is the existence absolute, which is sung by the wise to be eternal, universal, infallible, accessible (only) to highest devotion, benevolent, beyond the reach of words and thoughts, and endless and which, the best of sages ever strive to attain by putting a restraint upon the currents of (their) sense-perceptions,—grant you permanent bliss!

(V. 2.) May (they) always protect you, the arms of Śrîkaṇṭha (i.e. Śiva), which are lovely by bearing on them the marks of saffron from the breasts of Śarvâṇî (i.e. Pârvatî), which delight themselves in the work of removing the ornaments (from the body) of the wives of the highly conceited hoards of the enemies of gods,[2] which (hold) a number of weapons that shine with the brilliance of the fire at the end of the world and wear armlets of serpents radiant with gems in (their) crests!

(V. 3.) From the lotus-(like) navel of the lotus-navelled (Vishṇu), was (produced) Brahmâ; from him (was born) Aṅgiras; from him, the preceptor of the gods (Bṛihaspati); from him, the good-natured Śaṁyu; from him Śâṁyava (i.e. Bharadvâja); from him the pitcher-born (Drôṇa); from him Drauṇi (i.e. Aśvatthâman), who is of the essence of (Śiva), the enemy of Cupid; and from him in (the same) order (came) Pallava, the lord of the whole earth, whose fame was bewildering.

(V. 4.) Thence, came into existence the race of the Pallavas, who by the law of protection (which they adopted) removed (even) the slightest distress (of their subjects); and whose bar-like arms were skilled in rendering assistance to the lord of serpents who was fatigued by the labour of (carrying on his head) the burden of the earth.

(V. 5.) After kings, such as Aśôkavarman (and others), born in that family, had attained god-hood (i.e. died), was born Kâḷabhartṛi, the head-jewel of (his) family, like (Vishṇu) the husband of Indirâ (i.e. Lakshmî).

(V. 6.) From his son Chûtapallava, was produced Vîrakûrcha, of celebrated name, who simultaneously with (the hand of) the daughter of the chief of serpents grasped also the complete insignia of royalty and became famous.

(V. 7.) From him came Skandaśishya, the moon in the sky of (his) family, who seized from king Satyasêna the ghaṭikâ of the twice-born (i.e. Brâhmaṇas).

(V. 8.) From him came Kumâravishṇu who captured the city of Kâñchî and was victorious in battles. Then became king, Buddhavarman, the submarine fire to the ocean-like army of the Chôḷas.

(V. 9.) And after a host of kings including Vishṇugôpa had passed away, was born Nandivarman, who with the favour of (the god) Pinâkapâṇi (Śiva) caused to dance a powerful snake whose poison was in (its) eyes (Dṛishṭivisha).

(V. 10.) Then from the king named Śiṁhavarman, who wiped off the pride of (his) enemies, was born the victorious Siṁhavishṇu whose prowess was widely known on earth. He quickly seized the country of the Chôḷas, embellished by the daughter of Kavîra (i.e. the river Kâvêrî), whose ornaments are the forests of paddy (fields) and where (are found) brilliant groves of areca (palms).

[1] Read लिखितः.

[2] This is an elegant expression for saying that the enemies of gods (i.e., the demons) were destroyed by Śiva. It is usual with Hindu women to remove their ornaments and to give up their toilet after the death of their husbands.

(V. 11.) From his son Mahêndra was born Narasiṁhavarman (I), famous (like) Upêndra (i.e. Vishṇu), who, defeating the host of (his) enemies, took (from them) the pillar of victory standing in the centre of (the town of) Vâtâpi.

(V. 12.) From him came Paramêśvara (I) who crushed the conceit of (his) enemies, (and was) a sun in destroying the darkness which was the army of the Châḷukya king.

(V. 13.) His son's son (was) Narasiṁhavarman (II) who, equal to Mahêndra, once again organised the ghaṭikâ of the twice-born (i.e. Brâhmaṇas) and built of stone a house for the moon-crested (Śiva) which was comparable with the (mountain) Kailâsa.

(V. 14.) His son who was respected by kings, was Paramêśvara (II). This chastiser of the dark age (Kali) governed the earth according to the rules laid down by Manu.

(V. 15.) After him, Nandivarman, the repository of the aggregate (good) qualities of all ancient kings, got possession of the prosperity of the family together with the earth whose garments are the four oceans.

(V. 16.) Of this heroic lord of battalions (or, of rivers), and the home of many virtues (or, of gems), as of the ocean, the chief queen was Rêvâ who, like (the river) Rêvâ, had (her) birth from a great king (or, from a high mountain).

(V. 17.) To her was born on this (earth) the glorious king Dantivarman, a manifestation of the lotus-eyed (Vishṇu) himself, who was the delight of the earth, whose (sole) object (of life) was the protection of the three worlds and in whom the group of pure qualities such as prowess, charity and gratitude attained eminence, as it were, after a long time (enjoying) the pleasure of each other's company.

(V. 18.) Just as Gaurî (was the wife) of the conqueror of the (three) cities (i.e. Śiva), the suitable chief queen of that lord of the earth, the foremost of heroes, the powerful Pallava-Mahârâja, was (she) of a spotless race, who bore the name Aggaḷanimmaṭî (and was) the daughter of the celebrated king—a crest-jewel of the Kadamba family.

(V. 19.) As the (morning) twilight (gives birth to) the resplendent one (i.e. the sun); as Ambikâ (i.e. Pârvatî), (to the god) Kumâra (Skanda) possessed of the marvellous (weapon) Śakti (or, of strength); as Śachî, to the victorious Jayanta; so did this (Aggaḷanimmaṭî) give birth to (the glorious) Nandivarman.

(V. 20.) This (Nandivarman) puffed up with the prowess of his arms, acquired the prosperity of the (Pallava) kingdom, not easy for others to obtain, by killing (his) enemies on the battle-field which was laughing (as it were) with pearls dropping from the frontal globes of elephants slain by (his) unsheathed sword.

(V. 21.) Never shone so (thoroughly) a garden with (the advent of) spring, nor men of high birth with (good) qualities, nor women with morality, nor a millionaire with charity, nor humility with knowledge, nor a lotus-tank with the sun, nor the expanse of the sky with the moon at the end of the rainy season, as (the people of) this earth (shone), with that king.

(V. 22.) (A subject) of that king who was learned, modest and of established virtues, who was named Yajñabhaṭṭa and surnamed Bappa-Bhaṭṭâraka, was widely famous (for his knowledge) in the Śâstra, the Vêda and the Sâṅkhya and was celebrated for (his) persistent devotion to (Śiva), built in the village named Śrîkaṭṭuppaḷḷi a temple for Śiva similar to the high Kailâsa (mountain).

(V. 23.) His (viz. Yajñabhaṭṭa's) father was named Śivadâsa, who like the lord (of the goddess) of speech (i.e. Brahmâ) was possessed of pure intelligence. His mother was [Drê]-ṇamaṇi who like the (goddess) earth was great for the exhuberance of her (good) qualities.[1]

[1] A pun on the words guṇa and garîyasî is intended. The earth has all the guṇas such as form, taste, etc. and is also heavy.

(V. 24.) His grandfather was named Yajña who, like the repository of the kalâs (i.e. the moon), is the abode of sciences (kalâ),[1] has spotless character[2] (as the moon, a white disc), is the best of the twice-born (dvija), the expeller of ignorance (as the moon, of darkness) and shines with wide-spread fame.

(V. 25.) To that god Śarva (Śiva), the king granted the village called Tirukkâṭṭup-paḷḷi for (maintaining) the services (connected with) worship, feeding, etc.

(V. 26.) The heroic head-jewel of the Chôḷa race named Kumârâṅkuśa, the glory of whose prowess was well-known, whose liberality was equal to that of Râdhêya (i.e. Karṇa) and whose conduct was upright, made the (necessary) request (vijñapti) for (securing) this (grant).

(V. 27.) The executor (âjñapti) here, was the king's minister named Namba, the autumnal moon in the firmament of the Agradatta family.

(V. 28.) The Mâhêśvara Manôdhîra, the act of whose words, thoughts and body were (all) for the benefit of others, composed this praśasti.

(Lines 47 to 63.) Whereas in the sixth year of Kôvijaya-Nandivarman, at the request (made by) Chôḷa-Mahârâja and the âṇatti of Iraiyûr-uḍaiyâṉ Nambaṉ, this (village) Tirukkâṭṭuppaḷḷi of pañchavaram âyirakkâḍi[3], in Nâyaṟu-nâḍu, (a sub-division) of Puraṟ-kôṭṭam, (is) excluded from the district (nâṭṭu-nîṅgal) (and) has been assigned as an uṭpuravu dêvadâna in favour of (the god) Mahâdêva of (the temple of) Yajñêśvara built by Śaṉṉakkuṟi Yajñabhaṭṭa at Tirukkâṭṭuppaḷḷi, the immunities (parihâra) secured (therefor) viz. nâḍâṭchi, ûrâṭchi, puravu-poṉ, tirumukkâṇam,[4] vaṭṭi-nâṟi, pudâṟi, taṭṭukâyam, îram-pûṭchi, iḍai-ppûṭchi, maṉṟupâḍu, brokerage, tax on looms, kûlam, good cow, good bull, good sheep, watch-fee of the district, ûḍupôkku, taxes on marriages, potters and quarries, paṭṭina-śêri and all other (income) of any kind which the king could receive and enjoy within the boundary of this village, shall not (henceforth) be collected by the king but by this Mahâdêva of (the temple of) Yajñêśvara only. The (following) written declaration (vyavasthâ) is (also) granted (for the guidance of the donee): Mansions of burnt tiles (bricks ?) may be built (without special permission); artimissia (damanagam), andropogan muricatum (iruvêli), red-lilies (śeṅgaruṉîr) and ulli may be grown (in gardens ?); cocoanut (trees) may be planted in groves; reservoirs and wells may be sunk; large oil-presses may be used and the toddy-drawers (îravars) may not climb, without the consent of this (i.e. the Mahâdêva of Yajnêśvara), the cocoanut and the palmyra (trees) planted within the boundaries of (this village). With the written declaration thus defined (the village) was placed in the (hands of the) assembly (paradatti,) as a dêvadâna, with all immunities, to the (god) Mahâdêva of the Yajñêśvara (temple).

(V. 29.) O! Future rulers of earth! He, Nandivarman, the banner among all kings, with (his) lotus-like hands folded, bows down to you with (his) head which is marked by the head-jewel (viz.) the lotus-feet of Hara (Śiva) (and requests you) to protect this good deed always!

(V. 30.) Thus does Râma request again and again, all the present and future lords of

POSTSCRIPT.

On pages 180 and 181 of the Epigraphia Indica, Vol. IV., Professor Hultzsch gives an extract of a set of five copper-plates of Vijaya-Nṛipatuṅgavarman which were discovered at Bâhûr near Pondicherry by M. J. de la Fon. The originals are not available but appear to be in the possession of some person at Paris. A transcript of the inscription prepared by a Tamil Paṇḍit was supplied by the discoverer to Professor Hultzsch some years ago. It is in many places defective. Still as the information conveyed appears to be important for the study of the collateral branch of the Pallava family, known as Gaṅga-Pallavas, I append below the Sanskrit and Tamil texts as transcribed by the Paṇḍit.

It may be added by way of supplementing Professor Hultzsch's remarks that in V. 16 reference is made to a victory gained by a Pâṇḍya king with the help of Nṛipatuṅga. It is not stated who this Pâṇḍya was or where he fought the battle in which Nṛipatuṅga could have helped him. The Ambâsamudram inscription of Varaguṇa-Mahârâja (Ep. Ind., Vol. IX, pp. 84 to 94) states that that king advanced as far north as Araiśûr on the Pennar in Toṇḍai-maṇḍalam. Mr. Venkayya distinguishes this Varaguṇa-Mahârâja from his grandson Varaguṇavarman who fought the battle of Śrîpurambiyam with Pṛithivîpati I and his ally Aparâjitavarman, the last of the Gaṅga-Pallava kings (Madras Epigraphical Report for 1906–7, Part II, paragraph 21). It is not definitely known what relation existed between this Aparâjita and Nṛipatuṅgavarman of the Bâhûr plates. Anyhow Varaguṇa-Mahârâja who flourished two generations before Varaguṇavarman, about the beginning of the 9th century A.D., and who pushed his campaign in the north up to the bank of the river Pennar cannot be far distant in time from Nṛipatuṅgavarman. Consequently, the Pâṇḍya referred to in V. 16 of the Bâhûr plates may probably be Varaguṇa-Mahârâja. The enemy against whom Nṛipatuṅga fought to help his friend Varaguṇa-Mahârâja was very likely a king of the Siṁhavishṇu line who was ruling simultaneously with Nṛipatuṅga in some portion of the Toṇḍai-maṇḍalam.[1]

The object of the grant was the donation of the three villages Cheṭṭuppâkkam Viḷâṅgâṭṭaṅkaḍuvaṉûr and Iraippuṇaichchêri to the vidyâsthâna (V. 23) at Bâhugrâma (i.e., Bâhûr) (V. 25), by a member of the Baśâli family and a descendant of the Kuru race (V. 18). This chief was the minister of Tuṅgavarman (i.e. Nṛipatuṅga) (V. 28) who issued the necessary order for the grant of the villages (V. 21). The college (vidyâsthâna) at Bâhûr consisted of 14 gaṇas[1] and was controlled by the learned men of that village, being organised and maintained by them "as the Ganges (Mandâkinî) descending from the sky with all the fury of its rushing waves is borne by the god Śiva on one of his matted locks" (Vv. 24 and 25). The composer of the praśasti was Dâśaya (V. 30). The Tamil portion of the grant refers to the 8th year of Vijaya-Nṛipatuṅgavarman and states that at the request of Baśâli-Pêrarayaṉ and the âṇatti (âjñapti) of Viḍôlaiviḍugu (i.e., Viḍêlviḍugu) Kâḍupaṭṭi-Tamiṟappêraraiyaṉ,[2] the grant of the three villages already mentioned was announced to the residents of Bâhûr-nâḍu, a sub-division of Aruvâ-nâḍu, on its eastern side. As usual, the villages were granted after excluding previous donations and expropriating former owners, for the sole benefit of the vidyâsthâna at Bâhûr. The order was communicated to the assembly of Bâhûr-nâḍu (nâṭṭâr)[3] who on receiving it, obeyed it placing the order on their heads, circumambulated the village, planted stones and milk bush and drew up the necessary document (aṟaiy-ôlai).

[1] Dantivarma-Mahârâja of the Bhâradvâja-gôtra mentioned in the Triplicane inscription is supposed to have been the first of a line of kings who "spoke of themselves as belonging to the family of Pallava-tilaka in order to distinguish themselves from the Gaṅga-Pallavas" (Ep. Ind., Vol. VIII., pp. 290–6). Nandippôttaraiyaṉ was another king of the same family whose queen Mâṟambâvai figures as the donor in two inscriptions at Tiruchchennampûṇḍi, Tanjore district, which are dated in the 18th and 22nd years of the reign of Nṛipatuṅga (Nos. 303 and 300 of the Madras Epigraphical collection for 1901). This subordinate position of Mâṟambâvai suggests evidently either the defeat or the death of her husband at the hands of Nṛipatuṅga. Consequently, Nandippôttaraiyaṉ of the Pallava-tilaka family must have been the enemy against whom Varaguṇa-Mahârâja and Nṛipatuṅga jointly fought.

Among the boundaries described occur the names Teṉmalippâkkam, Nelvâyê-ppâkkam, Uṟattûr, Mâmbâkkam, Neriñjikkuṟumbu and Śiṟimâṉpâtti. The land comprised within the described boundaries of the three villages was given away to the members of the vidyâsthâna for the advancement of learning, after including these in Bâhûr and giving them the same exemptions (parihâra) and written declarations (vyavasthâ) as in the case of Bâhûr. The goldsmith (suvarṇakṛit) Nṛipatuṅga, a jewel of the Uditôdita family and a faithful servant of the Pallavas, wrote the grant (V. 32). The Tamil passage at the end of the inscription states that this goldsmith's father was Mâdêvipperu-daṭṭâṉ, son of Uditôdaya-Perudaṭṭâṉ, a native of Kachchippêḍu (Conjeeveram).

Of the villages mentioned, Bâhûr is the only place that can be identified. It is the head-quarters of a commune in the French territory and was the site of a battle between the French and the English troops in A.D. 1752.

No. 99.—TANDANTOTTAM PLATES OF VIJAYA-NANDIVIKRAMAVARMAN.

Taṇḍantôṭṭam (i.e. Tandantòttam, No. 134 of the Madras Survey map of the Kumbakonam taluk) is a village 6 miles east of Kumbakôṇam in the Tanjore district of the Madras Presidency. The existence of the plates was brought to the notice of the late Rai Bahadur V. Venkayya, M.A., by Mr. Narayanaswami Aiyar, Sub-Inspector of Police, Madras City. It is stated that they " were found with many other idols, while digging a foundation in the premises of a Śiva temple in the village of Thandanthottam, Kumbakonam taluk of Tanjore district, about 100 years ago. No one knew what it is and how they happened to be there."

The plates are 14 in number, each measuring about $11\frac{1}{4}''$ by $3\frac{3}{4}''$. When they were produced before Mr. Venkayya the plates were strung on a ring which did not appear to have been previously cut.[2] The ring is somewhat oval with diameters measuring $6\frac{1}{2}''$ and $7\frac{3}{4}''$. Its ends are secured at the bottom of a circular seal 3″ in diameter. The seal bears in relief a couchant Pallava bull facing the proper right. Along the margin of the seal is a Grantha legend which is illegible. The ring on which the plates are strung was cut by me with the permission of Mr. Narayanaswami Aiyar in order to change out the plates and prepare ink-impressions.

The two sides of the first plate, the first side of the second plate and the first five lines of its second side are in Sanskrit verse, engraved in the Grantha alphabet and the rest, in the Tamil language and characters. The inscription must originally have consisted of many more plates, two or three of which at least are missing at the beginning. These would have supplied a genealogy of the Pallava kings similar to that of the Vêlûrpâḷaiyam plates of Vijaya-Nandivarman published above. The concluding words of some of the plates in the middle do not fit in with the opening words of the succeeding plates. Consequently, it is presumed that a few plates[3] of the grant portion are also lost. This presumption is confirmed by the fact that while the number of the donees according to the Sanskṛit portion has to be 308, the number actually registered is only 244, even including

[1] This word was perhaps பாடத்தி in the original as in the Vêlûrpâḷaiyam plates, text, l. 63.

[2] As in the sequel it will appear that many plates both in the beginning and in the middle are missing the ring must have been cut open on some previous occasion and re-soldered.

[3] The breaks noted at the foot of the text are five in number. The first of these is at the beginning of the Sanskṛit portion. The second (l. 29) could not have counted more than one plate. The three others (ll. 78, 126 and 158) must have consisted each of a single plate which contained on them the 64 missing names of the donees.

those whose names seem to have been added subsequently in comparatively later characters, or at least in a different hand.

The first plate of the preserved portion begins by referring to a king who conquered the South and stating that a certain Hiraṇyavarman was born "again" for the "welfare of the worlds" (jagatâm hitâya V. 1). His son was Nandivarman who perhaps held the biruda Êkadhîra[1]. The next six verses are taken up with the praise of Nandivarman. Two historical facts referred to in this part of the inscription are interesting. One of them is that Nandivarman took away from the Gaṅga king a neck-ornament which contained in it the gem called Ugrôdaya (V. 6). The name of this Gaṅga king, however, is not furnished. The other is that Nandivarman was the owner of an elephant named Paṭṭavardhana (V. 7). With the permission of the king, a certain Dayâmukha caused a village to be granted to 308 Brâhmaṇas and called it Dayâmukhamaṅgala after his own name (V. 9). The executor (âjñapti) of the grant was evidently the very same person Dayâmukha entitled Kumâra, who is stated to have been the king's treasurer (V. 10). The composer of the eulogy (praśasti) was Paramêśvara Uttarakâraṇika son of Param-Ôttarakâraṇika (V. 14).

The Tamil portion is dated in the 58th year of Kôvijaya-Nandivikramavarman and registers a gift of land (converted into a village[2]) lying to the west of Taṇḍattôṭṭam (i.e. Taṇḍantôṭṭam) in Teṉkarai-Naṟaiyûr-nâḍu, a district of the Chôḷa country, to a number of Brâhmaṇas of Nalgûr[3].

To judge from the high regnal year, the Taṇḍattôṭṭam plates must belong to the reign of that Pallava king Vijaya-Nandivikramavarman whose Tiruvallam rock inscription is dated in his 62nd year i.e. 4 years later than our plates[4]. At the same time the alphabet of the plates and the name of the king lead us to infer that the Vijaya-Nandivikramavarman who issued these plates may be identical with Vijaya-Nandivarman III, the donor of the Vêlûrpâḷaiyam plates. If the inscription were preserved in full, this question would not have been left to surmise and conjecture. The father of Vijaya-Nandivikramavarman is here stated to have been Hiraṇyavarman; while, the father of Vijaya-Nandivarman, according to the Vêlûrpâḷaiyam plates, was Dantivarman. If the proposed identity of Vijaya-Nandivikramavarman with Vijaya-Nandivarman is accepted, the apparent discrepancy in the name of the father could be explained. The statement that Hiraṇyavarman "was born again," evidently indicates a second king of that name and we may suppose that Dantivarman, the father of Vijaya-Nandivikramavarman, was also called Hiraṇyavarman like his grandfather Hiraṇyavarman I the father of Nandivarman Pallavamalla. If the foregoing surmises are confirmed by future researches, the Taṇḍantôṭṭam grant would be 52 years later than the Vêlûrpâḷaiyam plates of the same king.

The donees whose enumeration occupies more than eleven plates of the inscription number 244. They belong to various gôtras and sûtras. To judge from their titles (such as

[1] See below p. 529, note 4.

[2] Evidently the Dayâmukhamaṅgala mentioned in V. 9.

[3] This village is not found on the map of the Kumbakôṇam tâluk. If by Nalgûr is meant Nallûr, which is 6 miles west of Kumbakôṇam, we have to suppose that the 308 donees were residents of that village. The word may also mean poor; but the idea of granting a village to Brâhmaṇas, purely on account of their poverty is rather rare.

[4] South-Ind. Inscrs., Vol. III, p. 91.

Chaturvêdin, Trivêdin, Sômayâjin, Vasantayâjin, Shaḍaṅgavid, Bhaṭṭa, Kramavid, Sarvakratuyâjin, Daśapurîya [1], Agnichit, and Vâjapêyin) most of them must have been learned men as stated in verse 9. The largest number of shares assigned to a single individual is 12 and such a recipient was Attôṇa-Shaḍaṅgavi-Sômayâjin (No. 109) whose gôtra and sûtra are lost on one of the missing plates. The composer of the inscription, viz., Uttarakâraṇika alias Ayyan Paramêśvara of the Rathîtara-gôtra and Paviṟiya-sûtra (No. 128) received two shares. Among the other donees, Tiruvaḍigaḷ (evidently the name of the local Vishṇu temple or of the Śaiva devotees, as stated on page (41) of the introduction) got 5 shares while Mahâdêva (the Śiva temple) was assigned 2 shares. One share was allotted to the reciter of the Bhârata; and the three arbitrators (madhyastha) got one share each. A share was assigned for "pouring water" and for "lighting fire" in the hall (ambalam). Perhaps this was the hall where the village assembly used to meet. Apparently the Bhârata was also recited in this same hall. The donees seem to have belonged to different parts of the country. The names of their native villages indicate that a pretty large number of them must have been originally residents of the Telugu country. Taṇukkil, Kârambichchêḍu, Iṟakkandoṟu, Iruṅgaṇḍi, Nambûr, Karañjai[2], Piṇukkippaṟu[3], Vêlpaṟu, Poppaṟu, Vaṅgippaṟu, Aṭṭambaṟu, Muḍipaṟu (or Muḍapaṟu), Virippaṟu, Arasappaṟu, Karippaṟu, Nûttilâppaṟu and Ponnambaṟu are apparently names of villages which were probably situated in the Telugu country. Kumiṟûr, Kâṭṭukkuṟi, Maṇaṟkâl, Mandiram, Paṟiyalûr, Pâḍagam, Pâṟkuḷam, Aṅgârai, Kaḷattûr, Veṇṇainallûr, Perumbûdûr, Kâynîrkuḷam, Îykkâṭṭukkôyil, Śiṟupaṟuvûr, Puliyûr (in Miṟalai-nâḍu), Aruvâgûr and Taramanallûr (in Aruvâ-nâḍu) [4] are distinctly Tamil names. The donees whose native villages may be presumed to have been situated in the Telugu country need not necessarily have immigrated into the Chôḷa country at the time of the grant. They might have been settled there sometime before. In any case it is clear that there was a large colony of Telugu Brâhmaṇas in the heart of the Chôḷa country during the first half of the 9th century A.D. The Telugu birudas of the Pallava king Mahêndravarman found in the Trichinopoly cave inscription,[5] testify to the influence of the Telugu people in the Chôḷa country already in the 7th century A.D. It is worthy of note that a large number of the village names are now held as titles by some well-known Śrî-Vaishṇava families—Dvêdaikômapuram (Vêdagômapura), Vaṅgippaṟu (Vaṅgippura), Uruppiṭṭûr (Uruppuṭṭûr), Kârambichchêḍu (Kârambichchêṭṭu), Śrîmalai (Tirumalai), Pattaṅgi, Vîravaḷḷi (Vîravalli), Muḍumbe, Taṇukkil, Kumâṇḍûr, Puttûr, Śêṭṭalûr and Kuṇḍûr being some. Maṇaṟkâl has evidently lent its name to one of the later Vaishṇava âchâryas of the 12th century, named Maṇakkâl-Nambi.

[1] Daśapurîya means 'belonging to or an emigrant from, Daśapura' a village identified with Mandasor in Malwa. Two grants of the Gûrjara chief Dadda IV Praśântarâga which are referred to about the middle of the 7th century A.D. (Ep. Ind., Vol. V., p. 38 f.) mention a donee who was an emigrant from Daśapura. The spurious grant of Dharasêna II of date Śaka-Saṁvat 400, also mentions a corporation of the Chaturvêdins of Daśapura.

[2] Karañjai also spelt Kirâñji (Ep. Ind., Vol. VI., p. 228) may be the same as Krâñja, Kâza (ibid. p. 114), a village in the Guntur tâluk of the Guntur district.

[3] Paṟu stands for paṟṟu (genitive parti) often found as an ending of village names in the Telugu districts. It is possible that paṟu is a mistake for the Sanskrit pura or a variant of the vernacular pâḍu.

[4] This district included within it the village of Bâhûr; see above, Introduction, p. 28.

[1] From the original plates and a set of ink-impressions.

[2] Read °जयन्दाक्षि°. Two or more plates before this, appear to have been lost. The portion of the verse which commences this plate evidently refers to a king who conquered the southern country (Dakshiṇâsâ).

[3] Read °माञ्जित°. [4] Read °तुण्णीम् । आसी°. [5] Read महितस्सर्व्वशास्त्र°.

[6] मृतांशु must be an elegant expression for the moon whose rays, dead in themselves, receive life and light only from the sun.

[7] Read [क्षित°. [8] Read °वत्क्ष°. [9] Read पक्षे.

TRANSLATION.

(Verse 1.) (Once) again, for the good of the world was born Hiraṇyavarman of stirring prowess, who made (his) enemies settle in forests and was the asylum of those who eagerly desired protection.

(V. 2.) From him was born the wise (and) prosperous king called Nandivarman who was the home of prowess (and) conqueror of the hoards of (his) enemies, whose victorious

[1] Read ஸவதிகருதுவாஜபெயி.

[2] ம்ப is written below the line.

[3] From the middle of this line beginning with கூற்றன்வாய் the writing is in a different hand.

[4] Read °த்தொம். The exact sense conveyed by this sentence is not clear. Literally translated it means "we ordered that water may be utilised in the manner in which it is given from the main sluice." In ll. 29 ff. it is stated that the donees had to irrigate their fields from a head of water constructed somewhere outside the main sluice. Perhaps the distribution of water was intended to be further specified by the phrase inserted here.

[5] Read வராவவக.

[6] The subscript Grantha ya in ஹிரண்ய, is added to the Tamil na which is a mistake for ṇa.

elephants reached almost the shores of the four oceans, whose fame extended to the (four) quarters and who was praised in battle for (his knowledge in) the use of all weapons.

(V. 3.) The only (one) of name râja that did not bow to him was the dead-rayed (moon) and the (only) country in this world, that did not pay him tribute was (that) where no men exist (i.e. the heaven where the undying gods live). And while this (king), comparable to Indra was ruling the earth, there was (nothing) unapproachable by the people (except, perhaps,) the way leading to hell.[1]

(V. 4.) [2]He is the lord of the circle of good people as Hari (is the possessor of the powerful weapon chakra); him the wise cling to as (gods) to Śakra (i.e. Indra); by him the earth[3] has become coupled with a husband; to whom faultless good deeds are most welcome; at whom the sole hero on the battle-field[4] the enemy-kings take fright; of whom the fame fills the ten quarters; and in whom Śrî (i.e. Lakshmî) dwells permanently abandoning (her) vice of fickleness.

(V. 5.) While this (king) was ruling the earth, anxiety (or great rush) (was seen) only in the wind; tendency towards inconstancy (or existence of the creeper chapalâ), in the forest; decay of the learned (or the waning of the moon), in the dark-fortnight; increase of serpents (or abundance of clouds) at the end of summer; merciless attack (or the grasping of swords), in soldiers; dishonourable living (or the riding on aerial cars), in the pictures of gods; and the enemies of good Brâhmaṇas (or able snake-charmers), in dissolute persons (or serpents).[5]

(V. 6.) He wore on (his) breast, as (if it were) the lord of serpents, the bed of Achyuta (dwelling) near his heart, a necklace which he had snatched away from the Gaṅga (king and in which was) the gem called Ugrôdaya (like the) Kaustubha.

(V. 7.) To his lot (also) fell an excellent elephant named Paṭṭavardhana which (in appearance) was like the (manifest) arrogance of its master, like victory in body, like a high mountain moving about, (and) from whose temples the ornament (of red paint) was wiped away by the excess of flowing rut sipped by the swarm of bees whirling about restlessly.[6]

(V. 8.) Wise men (and gods) praise him as Hari (himself); because indeed he offers protection to (all) living beings (as Hari preserves within his own self the rudiments of life);

[1] There is a pun intended here in the words râja (which means both 'king' and 'moon') and amartya. In the second half of the verse the poet wants to say that the people were not allowed to go to hell (i.e. to commit sin) but were free to achieve every other object of life.

[2] A rhetorical effect is aimed at by the use in their order of the seven cases of the pronoun yat which refers to the king.

[3] The two well-known consorts of Vishṇu are the goddesses Lakshmî and the Earth.

[4] The actual words used for 'sole hero' are êka-dhîra. It is not impossible that Êkadhîra was a surname of Nandivarman III. From the Kâśâkuḍi plates we learn that Êkadhîra was a surname of Nandivarman Pallavamalla or of his minister Udayachandra. Êkadhîramaṅgalam, the new name given to Koḍukoḷḷi in these plates, corresponds to Êkadhîra-chaturvêdimaṅgalam, a village somewhere near Tirunâmanallûr in the South Arcot district (Ep. Ind., Vol. VII., p. 133).

[5] The purport of the verse is that anxiety, inconstancy, decay of learning, etc., were not found in his kingdom. This is expressed by the poet when he says, with pun, that they were existing elsewhere but not in his kingdom.

[6] The Śaiva saint Sundaramûrti-Nâyaṉâr in his Tiruppadiyam on Vaḍamullaivâyil refers to a rutting elephant which the god of that place is said to have controlled by binding it with a twig and thereby conferring immeasurable joy on the Toṇḍaimâṉ, i.e., the Pallava king. It is not impossible that in the verb abhajat which also means 'worshipped', we may have to understand a parallel if not the identical incident mentioned in the sacred hymn. The age of Sundaramûrti-Nâyaṉâr could not have been long distant from that of Vijaya-Nandivikramavarman III.

loves truth (as Hari loves his consort Satyâ) ; is victorious (Jishṇu) ; firm (Achyuta) ; glorious (as Hari is united with Śrî i.e. Lakshmî) and is, among men (possessed) of a lovely body (as Hari is an embodiment of Death to the demon Naraka).

(V. 9.) The pious man whose name was Dayâmukha having informed this (king) according to rule, got that village which received the surname Dayâmukhamaṅgala, granted to three hundred and eight learned Brâhmaṇas who had studied the three Vêdas and the Smṛitis.

(V. 10.) That same respectable wise man named Kumâra who (has stood) the test of honesty (upadhâ) who is pure in (enjoying) religious merit (dharma), wealth (artha) and desires (kâma), who is the receptacle of upright conduct, prideless and devoted solely to the service of (his) master, whose wealth is shared by (all) good men, who seeks refuge in virtue, is free to (all his) relations and is clever in discharging the duties of a treasurer, was the âjñapti[1] of this (grant).

(V. 11.) He that grants land even though it be (in extent) as big as the hoof of a cow and he that robs (it) without caring for the disastrous end, shall both of them dwell, indeed, till the moon and the stars last, (the first, however,) in the home of the gods and (the second) in dreadful hell.

(V. 12.) The king says—I have sought shelter in religious merit. (Every) head-jewel among kings who has taken the vow to maintain sovereignty on the surface of the earth, shall protect this deed (of mine) without disturbing (its) scheme. May his pair of feet dwell on this (my) head, which never knew of bowing down to others excepting to the pair of the worshipful feet of Mukunda (Vishṇu).

(V. 13.) May the sacred cows whose every limb is purifying (and) whose purity is indeed demonstrated (materially), as it were, in the form of the (white) milk which they yield, grant your desires ! And may the revered gods on earth (viz., Brâhmaṇas), whose weapons are (their) words[2] and who by the offerings (which they make) during sacrifices please even the nectar-fed (gods) who dwell in heaven, protect you !

(V. 14.) This eulogy (praśasti) was drawn up by Paramêśvara surnamed Uttarakâraṇika son of Param-Ôttarakâraṇika, the self-chosen lord of Poetry.

(Ll. 26 to 38) In the fifty-eighth year (of the reign) of king Vijaya-Nandivikramavarman :—The inhabitants of Teṉkarai Naṟaiyûr-nâḍu in Śôṟa-nâḍu witnessing,—the forest and (other) waste lands lying to the west of Taṇḍattôṭṭam situated in their district, ... None shall be permitted to make . . . . or cut channels (kuraṅgu). A head of water (uvaṉri) shall be constructed above the main sluice (kûṟṟanvây) only, and water taken (from it) for irrigation. No (tax) of any kind such as (duty on) oil-presses and looms, ulaviyakkûli[3], the fee (in money) on marriages, ûreṭṭu, fee on potters, taṭṭukkâyam[4], duty[5] on toddy-drawers and shepherds, (fee on)

[1] For the correct interpretation of the word âjñapti see Ep. Ind., Vol. VII., p. 183 f.

[2] This complimentry attribute to the Brâhmaṇas also occurs in Bhavabhûti's Uttararâmacharita, in the passage ग्सद्ं ह्येतद्वाचि वीर्यं द्विजानाम्, etc. The sense conveyed, however, may not be ironical as it is in the passage quoted.

[3] This term occurs in the Kâśâkuḍi plates of Nandivarman as ulliyakkûli (above, p. 352, text-line 122) and is translated 'the hire of the well-diggers'.

[4] This may correspond to taṭṭâr-pâṭṭam of the large Leyden plates and be translated 'fee on goldsmiths.

[5] Pûṭchi is a term not found in dictionaries. This obsolete word seems to denote a duty or tax. Iḍaippûṭchi occurs as Iḍaippâṭṭam in the large Leyden plates.

The Brâhmaṇa donees of this village alone shall enjoy (the income specified above). Damanagam may be planted; mansions and large edifices may be built of burnt bricks; reservoirs and wells may be sunk; cocoanut trees may be planted in groves; (and) large oil-presses may be used. The cocoanut and palmyra trees (grown) within the boundaries of this village shall not be climbed by the toddy-drawers (îravar). [1] Also occurs in the Kûram plates (above, Vol. I., p. 151, text-line 77).

[2] This term which is perhaps the more correct form of tirumukkâṇam must denote a fee levied for remunerating the man who brings orders (tirumugam) from the king.

[3] This word may be divided into uppu kô and seygai which perhaps means the royalty paid for manufacturing salt.

[4] The Vêlûrpâḷaiyam plates give the form pudâṛi while, according to the printed text of the large Leyden plates, the term occurs as pitâ-nâṛi. The meaning is not clear.

[5] The name Kuṇḍûr is repeated in the original, although this same was the residence of the seven donees mentioned immediately before.
